QUARREL OF THE PIN AND THE NEEDLE.

How a Bright Little Chap Kept a Big State Secret.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S TOAD.

Little Fanny and the Gate of Heaven Royal Fish---The Nickel That Burned in Joe's Pocket,

A pin and needle being neighbors in a work-basket, and both being idle, began to quarrel, as idle people are likely to do. What they said is thus reported by the Globe Democrat:

"I should like to know," said the pin, "what you are fit for, and how you expect to get through the world without "What is the use of your head," replied the needle, sharply, "if you have What is the use of your eye if there is always something in It?" retorted the pin, bluntly. 'I am more active, and can get through more work than you can,"

'Yes; but you will not live long, for you have always a atlich in your side," You are a poor, crooked thing!'

said the needle. "And you are so proud that you can't bend without breaking your back,"

"I will pull your head off if you in-sult me again," quoth the needle.
"I will pull your eye out if you touch me," snarled the pin, "for, re-member, your life hangs upon a

While they were thus bickering a little girl entered, and, trying to sew something hard, soon broke the needle at the eye and threw it under the grate. She then tied the thread round the n ck of the pin, and, trying to pull it through her work, the head came off, when she threw it into the ashes, where the needle

'Well, here we are together again," said the needle. "We have nothing to quarrel about now," said the pin. "It seems mis-fortune has brought us to our senses."

State secrets, as a rule, are not per mitted to fall into the hands of the young. All nations guard their interests with jealous care, but there was once a boy who for a long time held possession of a very Important State secret which affected to a large extent the welfare of this country at a time of pressing peed.

According to Golden Days it came about in this way:

In the month of March, 1776, the Continental Congress sent Silas Deane as a political agent to the French court to enlist Louis XVI. in our cause, and bring about negotiations which would result in a treaty or alliance. At the same time Arthur Lee, another distinguished American, was in London in secret correspondence with influential Frenchmen.

Lee, one day, was approached by caumarchis, a secret envoy of the Benumarchis, a secret Government, who told him that the King was desirous of helping the colonies but did not want to do so in a manner which would involve him in an open war with England. Beaumarchis said that Louis would give us plenty of money and arms, if he could do so without exciting suspicion, for he cordially hated England, though I fear he did not like the thought of helping to establish a republic in America.

Accordingly, Lee, Deane and the crafty Beaumarchis put their heads to-gether and agreed upon a witty plan of secrecy. When Beaumarchis returned to Paris a correspondence began be-tween a firm called Roderique, Hortales & Co. and one Mary Johnson—the former belog, in reality, Beaumarchis and the latter Arthur Lee.

Lee represented that he had large amounts of tobacco to sell, and directed that the purchase money received from Hortales & Co. be sent to him by way of Cape Francois. In the meantime Vergennes, the French Minister of Vergennes, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the King had been informed of the plan and had approved of it, and Louis directed his treasurer to hold 1,000,000 livres subject to Vergenne's orders.

Now, it was very important that all the correspondence on behalf of the French Government should be con-ducted by one person, and the one selected to conduct it was Minister Vergennes' son, a boy of only 15.

knew how to keep a State secret as well as his illustrious parent. The boy took charge of the important business, and from time to time large sums of money found their way from the royal treasury you?" asked Joe White one day. "I to the coffers of the Colonies.

In order to give the transaction a business complexion some tobacco was aent

If England had discovered that a prewd little boy in the office of the French Minister was thus damaging her cause with his pen, over the signature of "Hortales & Co.," she would have called King Louis to account for his duplicity; but the accret was so well kept that England never suspected it. Young Vergennes displayed so much tact in the part he played that, when it was all over, he was summoned to court and received the thanks of the King.
In one of his letters he offered, as Hortales & Co., to furnish the Americans with "anything they needed." Of course, all he did was done with the free consent of the French Court. The little fellow would couch his letters in adroit commercial phrases, so that if they had fallen leto the hands of the enemy the truth would not have been suspected. In all "Messrs Hortales & Co." furnished the struggling colonies with $185,000.

colonies with $185,000. History is allent concerning the subsequent career of the boy with the State secret but I am almost ready to say that he became a noted diplomat for he had shown that he could keep an important secret and conduct a correspond-ence between two nations. No doubt his illustrious father, the great Minister,

A pecultarly delightful letter of the Duke of Wellington has been unearthed by Short Cuts, which runs as toad and crying as if his heart would break. On being asked what was the matter the child explained that he was crying "for his poor toad." He brought It something to eat every morning, but he was now to be sent away to school, a long distance off, and he was afraid that nobody else would give it anything to cat, and that it would die. The Duke, however, consoled him by saying that he would himself see the tond well fed, and by further promising to let the boy hear as to its welfare.

During the time the boy was away at autograph letters similar to that given and when he returned for the above, and when he returned for the Christmas holidays the tond was still allve to gladden his heart. The story is even more delightful than that of the Duke's indignation when he found that a party of children at Strathfield says—among whom, we believe, was the present Prime Minister—were having their tea without jam. The incident roused him to immediate action. and he at once rang the bell and issued a general order that "children's tea" was never to be served in his house with such "maimed rights."

It is hard for grown people to realize how many things are perfectly simple to there, but quite beyond the comprehension of children. Figures of speech in particular are almost sure to involve the little people in a tangle of perplexi-

Something of this sort happened to little Fannie in church not long since. She is looked upon by the Youth's Companien as a mere morsel of humanity, and it is the pride of her life that she is old enough to be allowed to go alone to the house of her aunt, three doors

Fanny is too short to reach the bellknob, and as her soft little fist cannot make noise enough to be heard by any one inside, she is obliged to stand on her aunt's doorstep until some goodnatured person comes along whom she can ask to ring the bell for her. This difficulty, however, she has been careful not to mention at home. ful not to mention at home.

to say about coming to the gate of Heaven and knocking for entrance. Fannie listened attentively, with a face which grew constantly more sober, until at last, when a picture was drawn of a little child's coming to the portal, she suddenly put her head down into her mother's lap and burst Into a per-fect convulsion of tears. Astonished at this sudden outbreak, her mother bent down and in an anxious whisper asked what the matter was.

"O, mamma," was the abswer, in a sobbing whisper, "I don't think I could ever get into Heaven." Way not?" asked the puzzled mother.

"O, mamma, I am so little I could never reach the bell and I never can make anybody hear me knock." Her gilef was so bliver that she had to be taken out of church and the rest of the afternoon devoted to explaining to her that the minister's words were not to be taken too Pierally.

While old and wise heads of the United States and England are carrying on a dignified quarrel over the owner ship of the seal in the Bebring Sea, Harpers' Young People proposes to tell you something about the royal fish.

You know that kings and queens have many rights and prerogatives. Well, one of the prerogatives of English rulers in olden times related to royal fish. Royal fish are sturgeon and whale, which are considered the finest of deep sea fish. For this reason, "on account of their superior excellence," whenever one of these fish was thrown ashere or caught near the coast of England it became the property of the king. This seems very unjust to those who might secure the whale or sturgeon. for they were compelled to give it up without receiving any pay. However, the king had some ground for claiming these royal fish as his property, because it was he who guarded and protected the seas from pirates and robbers, an in those days there were very many of

The most peculiar feature of the custom of royal fish was this-that, while the whole of the sturgeon belonged to the king, only half of a whale did. For it was a prerogative, as it was called, of the queen, that the tail of every whale caught in the way you have been told was her property, while the head only was the king's. The reason for this division, as given by the old records, was to furnish the queen's wardrobe with whalebone; and this reason is more amusing than the custom is peculiar, for the whalehone lies entirely in the head of the whale. But there are many more as strange and amusing customs recorded in Eng land's early laws.

This right of royal fish was considered of great importance, and was carefully guarded for many generations. It was also a prerogative of the kings of Denmark and the dukes of Nor-mandy, and from one of these it was probably derived by the princes of England.

This pretty little story is told by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat:

Deacon Jones kept a little fish warket. "Do you want a boy to help guess I can sell fish." "Can you give good weight to my customers and take good care of my "Yes, sir," answered Joe, and forth-with he took his place in the market,

"A whole day for fun, fireworks and crackers to morrow!" exclaimed Joe, as he buttoned his white apron about him the day before the Fourth of July. A great front was flung down on the

"Here's a royal trout, Joe. I caught myrelf. You may have it for 10 cuts. Just hand over the money, for cents. Just hand over the money, for I'm in a hurry to buy my fire crackers," said Ned Long, one of Joe's mates.

The deacon was out, but Joe had made purchases for him before, so the dime was spun across to Ned, who was off like ashot. Just then Mrs. Martin appeared. "I want a pice trout for my denser to morrow. This one will do:

direct to morrow. This one will do "A quarter ma'am." and the fish was transferred to the lady's basker and the sliver piece to the money drawer. Eut here Jue paused. "Ten cents was very chean for that flah. If I tell the Descon it cost fifteen he'il he satis-fied, and I shall have five cents to invest in fire eracters."

The Deacon was pleased with Joe's bergslu, and when the market was load each went his way for the night. But the nickel in Joe's pocket burned like a coul; he could cat no supper, and was cross and unhappy. At last he could stand it no longer, but walking

A Retallatory Policy Urged Against the United States.

He said the government was opposed to unrestricted reciprocity, which would ruin Canada's posed to unrestricted reciprocity, which would ruin Canada's manufactures, but was in favor of reciprocity in patural products. This, he said, the United States would not accept. The opposition wished the government to go to Washington and say that Canadians would starve without reciprocity. This was no way to make a bargain. The government would not do this, but Messrs. Cartwright, Wiman, Shalton and Longley had gone to Washington to beg for reciprocity. Within four weeks of their visit the United States had adopted the highest tariff they ever had, and trade relations with the United States were worse than ever. Sir John said the government was finding new markets in Japan, China and the West Indies. He stated that during the past two years, since the West India line of an ask to ring the bell for her. Stories of Crime Told to Judge Miller by Police Officers Vigitant and Otherwise - The Court Still A-Moving.
